

THIRTEEN HOURS OF PERIL.

ANOTHER SPEECH ENDED.

Mr. Merrick Concludes his Address in the Star Route Trial—Mr. Wilson Begins.

YOUNG REINHORN'S STORY OF HIS UPSET IN A STORM ON THE SOUND.

Its Connection Discovered—and Drawn Down—While Attempting to Savan Ashore—Rescue after a Night's Tossing by the Waves.

On Sunday morning last, off Mervin's Point, on the Connecticut shore, a fishing party, one from New Haven on the yacht Clarence, placed on a young man sitting in the submerged hull of a boat, who said that his name was Fred W. Behmann, that he had been in 100 fathoms of water over thirteen hours, and that a mate named George Cornell, who was with him the evening before when their boat was capsized, had been drowned. They took him to New Haven, and later in the day he returned to his home, 332 East Fourth street, New York. To a Star reporter he told yesterday the story of his adventure. He is a tall, athletic-looking young fellow, was about 16 years old. The companion who was lost was a little boy, the Behmann said.

He had been sailing since last Wednesday night, had been up to Hartford, Conn., on a visit, and noon on Saturday last started from Saybrook at the mouth of the Connecticut River on our return trip to New York. Our boat was sixteen and one-half feet long, rigged. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when we were six or seven miles from New Haven in the wind, freshened a great deal, and a big sea came over the deck, swamping the cockpit in the salt, and held on, however, by 6 o'clock the swell was fully seven feet high, and the wind, which was from the east, from the north, at the time we started, had turned to the south, and to the west, the other way. The trimaran was a Dory and a Pegg route, and yet it was exploded on an affidavit made by Mr. Behmann.

Why did Miner cross over? Simply in obedience to the objects of the conspiracy, in order to carry on the secret operations for the common benefit. Even if it were true that on the 1st of April, 1873, as far as we were concerned, there was no distribution of the profits of the conspiracy, What followed is alleged distribution? The route was established, and the distribution was to Peck and the others. The Trimaran was a Dory and a Pegg route, and yet it was exploded on an affidavit made by Mr. Behmann.
